

Changes

When you see me, the remage I give you is a shell from my past life. I sport 2 tear drops on my eye representing the 2 people that were injured in my crime. The other eye has 3 dots that represents "Mi Vida Loca" my bottom lip says "Chico" my body matches my face. Tattoos are ok but they scream the person I use to be in the world I did a lot of things I regret. I've done the club scene. I've sold drugs. I lived the life that I felt at the time was fun and right for me. I smoked weed on a daily. I never went with out and my kids were well taken care of. Now all I can do is shake my head cuz in the end it didn't get me any where. My character was flawed. The morals and values that I was raised with were buried. Money, hoers and cars ... Yeah, theres more to life than the expected. It's hard to live a crooked life. Selling dope means ~~working~~ dodging the laws. Working under the table. Looking over your shoulder. Even your best homie will put a ski mask on and kick your door in to claim your fame. Then smile in your face and never take the blame? So you stay with your pistol cocked trusting no one. Every day is a struggle. So why not choose to change? Being straight, going to school, working as hard but in the end it benefits you. Change the character you have that the streets gave you. The typical ghetto person intelligence is limited. So be a real A if you have to contain knowledge, wisdom and change. The streets offer you NOTHING? If you have heart to stand up for your hood or your set or your homies, change that energy to stand up for what is right. Family, God your Country. It goes deeper than what a narrow minded person sees. Expand and seek beyond. Blinded by the stupidity... I was there too. So many of us get in wrecks, just to make the same mistakes and crash again? Every time life 2 pieces you fall back but come back and TKO and over power the situation. Which is recognizing the problem. Learning from it. Then accept it. A lot of times we can't change the condition but we're in a position to handle it. The cards that we've been dealt of life are different. All we can do is make a difference and change our character for the better.

Stay Blessed... The Realist
