Who can't understand a woman's pain of having Cancer especially women in their 20's" when life's mysteries starts to unfold. Having Cancer lingering in their minds plays on all their hopes of a future.

I think one thing that makes over look in the ordeal is women loose a big part of themselves when they are absent from their natural hair - It is one that distinguishes her - No matter what hair is her crown and when they loose it (Dignity) can be lost too at least temporarily  until the hair finds its way back home. fellas you got your work cut out in this type of a crisis - most important thing for you to do is Listen & Be very sensitive - tune your frequency to hers.

Recently I seen some pictures of America's Sweet Heart featured in Esquire. I was stunned at how wonderful she looks at "42". Her entire appearance leaves you wanting to see more of her. I also do wonder if she'll look back on her life & regret not having at least one baby. Being able to make a baby is a wondrous experience? Her reasoning about caring for it - for "18" years of her life would be lost. That's why they call us adults - we must pave our own roads - At "53" I wished I had fathered a child. I guess everyone looks into a mirror at one point in their life and says to them selves - "what if."
