

Reply T.D
XWie

Hola VB

Thank you so much for your comments. I never thought about my lines being powerful. So I would like to thank you for saying that. Really how I feel about that is your thoughts, your comments, your insights, that's what gives power to anything I write. So thank you so much for taking your time to read them and comment about them.

As far as my hand-writing, to me, it's been a beautiful gift but also a curse. Because many people nowadays can't read or write cursive so it's hard for them to understand it at times. Some people can't even write in print (I read an article about it in a National Geographic actually about that). Even some of the people I use to write through snail-mail asked me on several occasions to tone it down a bit because they couldn't understand it. So that's the curse part. The beautiful gift part is that I get complimented a lot, and it looks pretty on paper. But like I said before it's held me back because people can't read it so we tried to tone it down a bit.

I actually started practicing in the fifth grade. Around that time I was drawing a lot. And my fifth grade teacher actually had the entire alphabet aro-and the classroom and so out of pure curiosity, to see if I could do it, I began to "draw" them on paper. Eventually it just started to become natural for me a loop here, a swirl there. So now this is how I write: Though I won't lie sometimes I wish my print was just as pretty

Thank You for the best wishes. I wish you the best as well. I don't know if you are male or female, but whatever you are, or whoever you are. V.B., I pray that the Creator blesses you always.

Sincerely, Jesus Andrade