PRISON NEWS

UPDATED Wednesday, May 6, 2015 --- 9:59 a.m.

PORTAGE, Wis. (AP) -- A prison guard at the Columbia Correctional Institution is recovering after being stabbed in the neck and head.

Columbia County Sheriff's investigators say the 26-year-old guard was attacked by an inmate Tuesday afternoon, but was able to fight back and subdue the prisoner with the help of other officers.

Sheriff's Lt. Roger Brandner tells the Portage Daily Register the attack took place in a day room. An inmate from Milwaukee had armed himself with a sharp pencil. The guard was treated at a Portage Hospital. Brandner says investigators believe the inmate was trying to kill the guard and are recommending charges of attempted first-degree intentional homicide.

Officials say the attack is the latest in a number of security issues at the prison in less than a year. An inmate is charged with killing his cellmate in February.

Portage, Wis. -- A worker at the Columbia Correctional Institution was stabbed by an inmate, said Sheriff's officials Tuesday.

The inmate, identified as Luis Ramirez, allegedly armed himself with a sharp pencil and attacked the Correctional Sergeant. The Sergeant was stabbed several times in the head and neck area. He was able to defend himself, and gain control of the situation. His injuries are not considered life-threatening.

Ramirez, 30, is facing a possible attempted first degree intentional homicide charge. Sheriff's officials say he is serving a 40-year sentence for armed robbery, and has a history of batter and assaults on law enforcement.
