Dear Friend,

When someone asks you how do you feel, do you have to think for minute before you answer? When you are looking off into space and someone asks you what is on your mind, and you say nothing. Is it really nothing on your mind? Often we have to think about how we feel and what we are thinking because we are not always able to identify our feelings.

During the past few years the phrase "emotional literacy" has entered our culture's vocabulary. Daniel Goleman's best-selling book, Emotional Intelligence: Why It Can Matter More Than IQ, (Bantam, 1995), has brought this critically important issue into the national consciousness. New research has indicated that emotional literacy is the key factor predicting success or failure in all aspects of human relationships – work, family, friendships – and in the well-being and optimism that is the consequence of self-esteem.

So what is emotional literacy? Emotional literacy is the ability to identify, manage, and express one's emotions in a mature and conscientious manner. With this ability comes the capacity to empathize with the feelings of others.

The cost of emotional illiteracy is staggering... abusive behavior toward others or oneself; high levels of frustration, anger, sadness, and personal suffering; inept parenting, addictions of all sorts, and much physical disease. Emotional illiteracy is a pivotal factor underlying most crime. One of the clear indicators of emotional illiteracy among youth is the increased violence in American schools.

The good news is that emotional literacy skills can be learned at any time in life. Becoming emotionally literate results in the ability to read one's own feelings as well as the feelings of others. When people develop emotional literacy skills, they are better able to identify, express, and manage their feelings. There are greater options for effectively dealing with stress and tension. There is greater impulse control. There is heightened self-awareness and self-understanding. Social skills and the ability to communicate effectively are enhanced. Consequently, behaviors and attitudes that arise from emotional literacy support and reflect self-esteem, empathy, and appropriate action in the world. The cultivation of emotional literacy nurtures and elicits the best in people. Knowing this, it surely makes good sense to offer the necessary resources to support emotional literacy for every prisoner in the state of Illinois. Write to us and tell us about your emotional literacy.

In peace

DATE: May 14, 2015
TO: CCI Inmates
FROM: Michael A. Dittmann, Warden
SUBJECT: Property Compliance

As a part of the institution lock-down a thorough search of each cell and inmate's personal property will be conducted. This will include insuring that each inmate is within over-all personal property limits as well as individual item limits. This phase of the search is likely to begin the week of May 18, 2015.

Inmates will be allowed opportunity to dispose of any contraband property and bring themselves within allowable limits as mandated by DAI Policy 309.20.03 and CCI inmate handbooks. Boxes sized in accordance with DAI Policy 309.20.03 will be provided. Inmates will need to divide their personal property into legal, hobby and other personal property categories. Inmates will then put their allowable property in the boxes. Any personal property over-the-allowable limits (either in overall property or individual items) must be disposed of. Inmates will have an opportunity to choose to dispose of any over the limit property by means of sending out at their own expense if they have funds available, destroying the items, or a one-time opportunity to send it out during a visit.

This is your opportunity to sort out any additional property items you have and/or bring your personal property into allowable limits.

Failure to sort your property will result in staff making decisions about your property when it is searched. You are encouraged to take this opportunity to bring yourself into compliance with policy.
