

Reply To Wg 8r

Metairie

I can't help but to thank you for the hope you've given me. knowing not only that good people do exist, that people do care and that I'm not just judged and condemned by the public eye. I believe random acts of kindness is like Karma and what you put out in your environment ect... could help change things not only in your life but those around you.

When I posted this I did it out of desperation hoping against hope to reach out to someone and they would understand my true intentions not to use people like so many others and not to use this site in a negative way like so many are trying to do because for those who really truly depend on a caring hand it is our only hope without people like you willing to do good those of us truly trying to change our lives and make something better out of it wouldn't have a chance.

It excites me that I can see light towards getting into Truck Driving so I will be able to get my license before I'm released my biggest fear being released with no family, no where to go and not any clothes to put on my back I couldn't even get proper work boots for jobs that require it.

but knowing I'll have an opportunity to Receive my COI wishes those fears away I may be homeless but I'll have the tool to Succeed

For those who read this please Make comments concerning my goal and my mission that way in effect to keep my blog driving towards employment in the public eye so others like Melanee who wish to help can and even if you don't have it to help that would be your contribution I wish you all well and will keep you posted on my journey

Sincerely
Jedely