

Georgia being the only state have invocation (prayer before session message)

This is becoming problematic because church and state rules. Some feel like the Christians are taking over and the other religion being left out like the Jewish individual. First of all let's acknowledge each person has the right practice and believe what they want. I don't care if they believe the don't coming out of the ground is their King. It may sound a little far fetch but that's their rights under constitution. Every religious person need to come to grip with that. Second of all we need to stop condemning others for what they believe in. If you don't believe in nothing. That's fine but don't hinder the ones who has religious ~~believe~~ belief. Respect will take you a long ways and knowing that God is the only judge of all man. If a person has belief that is not right that is not for you to judge till you treat them like they are a outcast. We ostracize no one. We ~~ought~~ ought be able to share with each other what we believe without a controversy secretly in action. I believe pray is need every ~~where~~ where before we start the day off. Because we all need peace, protection and guidance for the day. Prayers do change the atmosphere. I grew up in a religious environment. Majority of my family is in some times of religion. A lot of them are pastor, prophetess, prophet and teachers. Growing up I got a chance to fellowship with other like Muslim, Jehovah witness, <sup>Catholic</sup> (sic), Hindu etc. If I never experience it and took the time to learn what they believe. Like some people criticize what they believe in and don't know nothing about other religion. Just because you learn something don't me you are part of their religion. That means you understand them better. But there was something my dad would always do. Mind you he was the Pastor of a Holiness church. Every Saturday he would invite the Jehovah witness in. They would have bible study when they got to a part of the teaching that they disagree on. Each one would say my bible says this in a calmly manner. Then they would move on to question 2. discuss it. Nobody tried to convert. He ~~to~~ cut their hair. They came to our church. I went to visit them at Kingdom Hall. I had a Catholic friend. Everyday she had a encouraging word for me. I am Christian we exchange our encouraging word everyday. We was the best of friends. Still are. In another thing it is good to learn about

Other religion. I went through a faith based that taught us religious diversity. I learned so much about other religions. It open up a whole new level of communication on a religious level. It's important to learn. So many people criticize people and thing. All because what somebody else said. I am part of organizational called Kairos it's non denominational and not based solely on religion. We have muslim or other religion involved when they come to Kairos they feel the love and acceptance. Nobody tries to convert nobody. Everybody prays together and just have good time fellowship. My suggestion to Georgia legislative. Don't do away with prayer and message (invocation). Implement the other religion let them give the prayer and message one day. Everybody take turns. Because each religion do has some positive message to it. Whether it's showing love, need ing peace or protection. It's their. Let's me say this about Church and State. For years I been hearing this. My question is how many are trying to stop this. By going to the federal courts. Trying to address this issue in the courts. How many are you christian Democrat and Republican doing this? This issue within itself is a easy fix. But by getting all these people involved pessimistic situation. It makes things seemed bigger than what they really are. Read 1 Corinthians 6:1-6 why are we taking a situation to court like this. We should be able to deal with disputes among ourselves.
