

"The best way to get over one man is to get under another." - Unknown

Dear Readers,

I'm convinced. I have a 3-month curse. I can only think of two relationships in my life that have lasted over 3 months. I was just not meant to be loved.

Gosh, whom I previously wrote about, is in the "Hole" (SHU/Segregation). I have no doubt that he will be in there until he is released in late April.

This past Wednesday, Gosh got in a fight in the Chow Hall with some ignorant Muslim dude. He didn't provoke the fight, nor did he go looking for it.

It's a fairly involved story, but to shorten it as much as possible, we were in line at the Chow Hall & some idiot Muslim dude behind us had an attitude & started "talking shit" to Gosh.

Gosh is definitely the wrong person to do that to. He came out swinging & didn't stop until he was subdued by the CO's.

What also sucks is that we had recently had an argument & were just starting to get back into our old groove when this happened. I really hate that everything wasn't quite back to normal when this happened.

There was another incident with Gosh two days before that happened, this past Monday. Being as vague as possible, we got screwed out of $20 on a business deal. It was my money, & my attitude was "shit happens" & I learn not to deal with the same people again.

Got Gosh. He grew up in a ghetto selling drugs & he will not stand for anyone getting one over on him. He put a lock on a belt & went out to collect.

Unfortunately, Travis, whom I've also previously mentioned, was the go-between on this business deal, so he's the first person Gosh went after.

The end result of all this was that Gosh faced off with four D.C. dudes on the Rec yard who were actually the ones responsible, & they pointed at Travis & made him pay for their trash.

This has been a really stressful week for me. I didn't want any of this to happen - including the argument which involved his defending one of the people who "ratted" on me & got me put in the Hole & 41 more days in prison. There's no excuse for defending someone like that - especially if you're supposed to be in a caring relationship with the other person. Loyalty is a huge priority to me & he just didn't give a shit.

A few different people said that Josh had "Short-Timers Disease." This is where guys are close to getting out & they just go mental. And he certainly did. He was (is) bi-polar & would get very violent when he's angry. I, on the other hand, am a "delicate flower" & am not violent in any way.

Man, this sucks. I really miss him in spite of all the bad things. He had talked about going to the Hole before his "out date" & threatened several times to punch anyone who pissed him off.

I will never understand why someone would prefer to be in the Hole than spend their time on the compound just enjoying their last month & being treated like a king. I just don't get it.

He swore several times that he would stay in touch after he got out & that he'd help me out & blah, blah, blah. I've heard that so many times. I'm not holding my breath.

Speaking of helping... that reminds me of something else.

With all the typing I have been doing, I am owed a great deal. Two different guys here wanted to send me money to make it easier, and one of them was going to make it possible to buy another MP3 after mine was stolen.

Well, in order to do this, the inmate needs to send funds from their inmate account to a 3rd party on the outside, & that person would then send those funds to me.

The problem is, I have ZERO outside help. My "friend" Pam won't even contact me anymore & the only other person I knew from the streets was Will in Ohio.

I've mentioned Will previously. We had "encounters" in various parts of the country & then out of the blue he looks me up & writes me after ten years. What a shock. He had even talked about our getting together after I get out.

So, since he was the only other option for me,

I asked Will,

Will had previously complained about looking stuff up online for me, which I sure as hell didn't get 'cause I know it only takes a few minutes to look something up online - & I was locked up before everyone had a smartphone which makes it so much easier. I still had to hope because, I thought, surely Will would help me even if it's just one time in order that I could replace my AP3.

I'm certain you already know where all this is leading. He fucking said "no."

Now, I get that he's really busy right now. Among other personal obligations, his father recently died & he has to deal with the estate. (For the record, Will isn't working (a job)).

But, How fucking much of your time does it take to deposit a check & either send a money order or Western Union funds right back to someone - especially so they can replace their stolen AP3?

People, if you're not willing to do anything to help someone in prison, then don't call yourself a "friend." Needless to say, I really don't see myself getting together with Will when I get out. So thank you.

I got a note from Josh today from the SHU. It was really sweet & said some things he'd never said before. Of course I cried my eyes out. I love that crazy fucker & I'm gonna miss him so much. This really sucks. Damn, I miss him. That note meant so much to me, & I'm so grateful that he sent it. I'll probably never see him again, but I sure hope we stay in touch.

Now I have to find a new cellie
Until next time, I wish you

Love & Blessings,
