

Should you break the law to meet someone's need?

I really want to visit this subject because there has been people who seriously living in poverty not because of their choosing. They lost their job by being laid off etc. Homeless don't know when their next meal or their family meal coming from so they stole out of the store on continuous basis one day they got caught. The judge sentence them to jail time for stealing out of the store. The owner wanted ~~to pay~~ them pay for stealing from them. If I was the store owner. I would have wanted to know why they was stealing? What are their conditions in life. Once I found out. I would not wanted charges against them but would ~~try~~ have tried ~~to~~ to help them. Some things are very ~~pitiful~~ petty when it comes to the laws of the land. I want to share this ~~idea~~ little nugget with you. 1 Samuel 21:1 This is the first time Ahimelech is mentioned. Either he was the Ahijah mention 1 Samuel 14: 3 or 18 or more likely, he was Ahijah's successor. In either case Ahimelech had to go against the law to give the ~~consecrated~~ consecrated bread to David because the bread was supposed to be given only to the priests (Leviticus 24:5-9) But Ahimelech put David's need and life ahead of religious ceremony and fed him the ~~consecrated~~ consecrated food. This upheld a higher law of love (Leviticus 19:18) Centuries later, Jesus would refer to this incident to show that God's laws should be applied with compassion. To do good and to save life is God's greater law. Will you save a life instead of sending everyone jail or prison for break the law
