

GROWING FROM EXPERIANCES!!

Dear readers,

Hello once again and yes im still here!though i mostly write of experiances and uplifting situations.The topic i'd like to share with you is one of trials and tribulations and of growth in all of lifes many struggles inside these prison walls.Since i last wrote i no longer work in the administration part of the unit i now work in a big warehouse freezer something i did not wantto do i started off in another part of the warehouse but my efficency to work stood out too much and i was taken advantage of and moved all of my hard work and effert to stay where i was did not matter so i was moved in the one place nobody wants to go...i wanted to refuse but was told i couln't and i didnt want to get into trouble.then i was forced to opperate a faulty pallet jack only to hurt myself. and written up for it funny thing is we are forced to work and opperate the equipment in an unsafe manner then written up....go figure...then i had another inncodent with the same machine and was written up again!!!after several months now i finally came to terms with my situation.imlocked up and only seen as a tool and the supervisors dont even care for our safety.all thats cared about is getting the job done.i used to believe that our hard work doesnt go un noticed but it doesnt its seen as an oppurtunity to get as much work done out of the mule you can,my growth comes from dealing with what is expected of me and accepting i have no choices in here and one day when i am out i may not have choices eaither.from every situation i try to see the good.my first day in the freezer i wanted to turn around and walk out. now im ok with it and dont care to even change any more the tuff part is not having the proper clothing for 17 degrees.all in all the moral is learning to adapt ive used this experiance to learn as much as i can because who knows i may just have to work in this type of conditions when i am out.and im using it to learn all i can about how to opperate highlift equipment and forklifts a skill i didnt know untill i started working out there. long story short its taught me how to be more careful under these conditions.its taught me to accept punishment even though it may not be my fault and thats a hard pill to swallow.i even grieved the situation to no result and contacted UMBUDSMIN because eventually some else will get hurt alot worse and i wanted it to be documaented.the sad thing is under policy TDC has to do a proper investigation when OMBUDSMIN is contacted and they didnt even do that!they did an uninformal investigation and didnt even contact ME the complaint so ive learned TDC does alot of paper pushing!well i just wanted toshare this situation with all of you an encourage you in beleiving some good does come out of it all no matter how bad it looks if you only look for it!
