Greetings scientist,

I respect all views, rather scientific or religious. atheist, or non believers alike. I'm adimently against abortion though. I understand the various arguments over rape victims right to abort, the incest etc. many reasons exist, but on the other end of the argument there are alternatives. its sad to me that USA has let this continue for so many years. millions of babies - where do you think they go ? if I may ask.

A fetus is scientificly a living organism once it has a heart beat friend. its a life. just as the sencless execution of a life - it can be resolved by other means perhaps ? I know the recent post of a avid anti abortion supporter/friend prompted ya reply. I just wonder how strongly you feel about the catholic's views ? they are after all against the death penalty! Most religious denominations have not taken such a stance. few have i can not name them all off hand. As an advanced society civilized culture we should seek other means to stop the killing. perhaps a rapest etc. would think about this or one who refuses to use birth control if they were to be held accountable for the life they created for 18 years as opposed to killing it - such a inhumane form of birth control. its selfish really. iresponcible indeed. I know many moons gone past- 2 decades ago I found out a lady i got pregnant terminated the life we created on acident. it ruined my view of her I had no say so in the matter it still disgust me to this day. I had no choice in the potential son/ daughter... I created being terminated. that bothers me to date.

I for one do not fear death. its a journey we all make, but let it be in the natural course of events as life's journey. From the gallows side of the razor wire... I digress, respectfully,
