Hi Leon!

you may remember

mozi - my B. F. Nan's doggie.

This is his memorial card to let his many fans know of his passing. He was a therapy dog & visited many shelters. I'll miss him a lot. ∴ Take care.

MY TAKE:

The Mass Media (esp. TV NEWS and so-called legal experts !!!)
Repetitiously Castigate defendant
Lori Loughlin, because she doesn't appear to "act guilty" in public appearances !!!!!!

SHE PLED NOT GUILTY...
IS ENTITLED TO DUE PROCESS
... PRESUMED INNOCENT!!!

Her mad! Rabid CRITICS Play "The RED QUEEN" in, off with her lovely head,
and then try her later!!!

DAMN FOOLS!!!

WHY?! The HOT Hell would Laughlin
UNlike Felicity Huffman-pleaded NOT !!!
GUILTY, and Then pretend To be GUILTY!

PRAYER !!!

Let's PRAY prospective JURORS
She her as NOT BEING "GUILTY"—

AN AMERICAN DREAM TOO FAR

After our FIRST American Black President, Americans is apparently a long way from, as is said, experimenting with yet another "FIRST", FIRST WOMAN, FIRST Cuban President.

It's back to the "SAMENESS" offered in Vice President Joe Biden or Sen. (R. KY.) Ron Paul, Hillary and her elitist Supporters are caught-up in Not "a Fairy Tale" but AN AMERICAN Dream Too Far.

MY TAKE:

Beto (Robert) O'Rourke, 46, [aka Tony Robbins], is obviously the man of the hour!

[It's self-defeating to play the
"RACE CARD" [i.e. white men]

Investigating leaks began with Obama

Margaret Sullivan
The Washington Post

The Justice Department's seizure of a reporter's phone and email records is an overt threat to every journalist covering the Trump administration, said Margaret Sullivan. Last week, investigators seized years' worth of phone and email records from Ali Watkins of The New York Times and arrested her alleged source, a former staff member of the Senate Intelligence Committee. "No one should be surprised" at this intrusion into press freedom, because Trump's Justice Department had a "clear blueprint to follow—courtesy of Barack Obama." Obama's Justice Department used the Espionage Act, "an arcane century-old law," to pursue leakers on nine different occasions. Investigators subpoenaed telephone records from Associated Press journalists, and named Fox News reporter James Rosen a "co-conspirator" in a leak about North Korea's nuclear program. Worst of all, they traced calls and emails from Times reporter James Risen, who nearly went to prison for refusing to give up a source at the CIA. Late in his second term, Obama backed off the "unsavory" pursuit of reporters' confidential sources. But he set "a dangerous precedent." President Trump has openly talked of locking up reporters—and leak investigations may be how he does it.

Bill Clinton's #MeToo reckoning

Jim Geraghty
NationalReview.com

Bill Clinton's sexual misconduct finally appears to be catching up with him, said Jim Geraghty, but the damage to America's political culture is already done. The former president was widely condemned for a recent interview in which he portrayed himself as the victim of the Monica Lewinsky scandal, despite the change in attitudes toward such behavior in the #MeToo era. If Clinton won't accept full responsibility for his actions in the '90s, Democrats should: Blinded by partisanship, feminists and liberals decided the Lewinsky scandal was about consensual sex between consenting adults, and let Clinton trick them "into defending the indefensible." As we now recognize, sex between a 22-year-old unpaid intern and the president of the U.S. is an abuse of power. Democrats would have lost virtually nothing by pushing Clinton to resign in 1998. Al Gore would have become president and a heavy favorite for re-election, likely presiding over an identical agenda. But the Left defended Clinton to the hilt, proving that "you could get caught red-handed and survive if enough people deemed you politically irreplaceable." That's a lesson President Trump's defenders learned well: "When your guy is caught with his pants down or hand in the cookie jar, don't hold him accountable, but turn the tables and attack, attack, attack."

For women, life is a beauty pageant

Bari Weiss
NYTimes.com

Miss America may have given up its swimsuit competition, said Bari Weiss, but American women are still "living inside a beauty pageant." The only reason the pageant—or rather, the "competition," as it's now called—did away with young women strutting the stage in bikinis "is that it's simply too explicit for our euphemistic era." Today, enlightened men pretend not to judge women on their appearance, and women tell each other we don't care how we look. But our culture still relentlessly objectifies women. Women seek to be "super fit" with hours of Pilates, yoga, and Soul Cycle, avoid carbs, and live on salads and smoothies. To impress men and other women, "we wear stilts to hike around concrete jungles and lie about how they are anything other than medieval torture devices." We get body hair waxed off, and spend hundreds on beauty routines and makeup and hair. Say this about Miss America's now-defunct swimsuit competition, with young women parading around "in stilettos and tiny squares of nylon held up by string": At least it was honest. The contestants were being "watched and scrutinized and judged," just as women are in the real world every day.

Viewpoint

"Our planet does not need our saving. The biosphere has endured cataclysms far worse than us—and after millions of years thrived again. Even the Earth's five fearsome mass extinctions became opportunities for the biosphere's creativity, driving new rounds of evolutionary experiments. As the great biologist Lynn Margulis once put it, 'Gaia is a tough bitch.' What Earth's history does make clear, however, is that if we don't take the right kind of action soon, the biosphere will simply move on without us, creating new versions of itself in the changing climate we're generating now."

Adam Frank in NYTimes.com

It must be true... I read it in the tabloids

■ A Virginia woman managed not to lose control of her car after a 2½-foot-long snake slithered out of the air vent as she was driving—and then disappeared under a seat. Trying to stay calm, Lora Goff pulled over and called 911. When the animal control officer arrived, he confessed he was also scared of snakes. "I said, 'I'm in trouble now,'" Goff recalled. The officer failed to catch the snake, so Goff put sticky traps under her seat and drove home. Her husband found the serpent stuck to a trap the next morning, but Goff doesn't care to know how he disposed of it. "I don't want to see that thing anymore."

■ A 26-foot-tall statue of Marilyn Monroe is causing outrage in Stamford, Conn., because the starlet's rump points directly at a nearby church. Put up by the city as part of a summer art display, the statue depicts a famous scene from The Seven Year Itch in which Monroe's white dress is lifted by a blast of air from a subway grate. "It's disrespectful," said Pam Riley, a worshipper at the First Congregational Church. "Everyone's under there looking up her skirt."

■ Firefighters in England had to rescue a man who became stuck up a tree while trying to catch his escaped pet parrot. When the green parrot fled its cage and flew into a nearby tree, its owner scrambled up the branches. He soon discovered that he couldn't reach the parrot—or climb down the tree. Firefighter Michael Novell said it took his crew 35 minutes to rescue the man, "but unfortunately the parrot made a bid for freedom and succeeded."

Our list of criminal justice campaigns that can win in 2019

by Aleks Kajstura, December 12, 2018

The 2019 legislative session is almost upon us, and we've compiled – as we do every year – a list of under-discussed but winnable criminal justice reforms. While federal prison reform continues to receive more than its fair share of attention, state legislatures and governors remain empowered to determine the future of mass incarceration.

We publish this list as a briefing with links to more information and model bills, and recently sent it to reform-minded state legislators across the country. (To read about recent legislative victories on these fronts – such as three states ending unnecessary driver’s license suspensions in 2018! – see our new Annual Report.)

Our list of reforms ripe for legislative victory are:

- Ending prison gerrymandering
- Lowering the cost of calls home from prison or jail
- Protecting in-person family visits from the video calling industry
- Stopping automatic driver's license suspensions for drug offenses unrelated to driving
- Repealing or reforming ineffective and harmful sentencing enhancement zones
- Protecting letters from home in local jails
- Requiring racial impact statements for criminal justice bills
- Creating a "safety valve" for mandatory minimum sentences
- Eliminating "pay only" probation and regulating privatized probation services
- Reducing pretrial detention
- Decreasing state incarceration rates by reducing jail populations
- Curbing the exploitation of people released from custody

- Ending electronic monitoring for individuals on parole
- Shortening excessive prison sentences

Could your state be working on any of these reforms? We're looking forward to the progress we can make together in 2019!

OVERCOMING PREJUDICE

You've got to be taught to be afraid
Of people whose eyes are oddly made
Of people whose skin is a different shade
You've got to be carefully taught

You've got to be caught before it's too late
Before you are six or seven or eight
To hate all the people your relatives hate
You've got to be carefully taught.

These words are by Oscar Hammerstein sung in the musical "South Pacific." We should not think that prejudice against a different race is the only prejudice. Think of how we look at people sleeping on a park bench, an unemployed immigrant curled up under a stairwell, a prostitute hiding behind a sidewalk scaffold, or even those who go to visit their loved ones in prison.

There are other prejudices that we know by other features than skin color. There are those who are handicapped physically, foreigners whose language is different, and elderly who are senile and talk to themselves or make repetitive noises that don't make sense. In the facility where my husband is, I have come to love those whose minds and speech are affected by age and illness. I love their smile and how their eyes light up when talked to, one even saying, "Can I come home with you?" In a powerful book entitled "The Blood of Lambs," a Muslim and an Islamic terrorist by the age of seven, tells of beings trained to kill those opposed to his Muslim beliefs. He wanted to see Israel and America destroyed. He said he loved Allah with all his heart.

He came to America to promote his beliefs and to win people for Allah. He went into the neighborhoods of the poor and won them over by bringing them food.

An almost fatal accident severely injured Kamal, the Muslim. Dr. David arrives on the scene in the midst of his recovery and invites Kamal to recuperate in his home. After the offer, the Dr. said that there was no catch—he just wanted to show Kamal the love of God. Kamal was sure he was being seduced and defiled by these people. But throughout his recuperation with Dr. David's family, he slowly was changed by their hospitality, the children, the food and the prayers for his recovery. He fought it, but in the end he spoke to crowds about his life-changing experience—living in the Dr.'s home and being cared for by a Christian family. Kamal continued in his Christian faith, speaking to crowds of his faith and overcoming the extreme prejudice that existed among the Muslims.

In another book on overcoming prejudice, "My First White Friend," by Patricia Raybon, I read Patricia Raybon's confession. She stated "I stopped hating white people on purpose." She knew it was wrong. She said the hate made her physically sick. "It was an obsession, an emotion, psychologically gnawing on her in a way that never let her rest; that always left her dazed half of the time and weary the other half. She said the race-focused consciousness was killing her because it confined her spirit, her vision and her sanity." She said, "I had to stop hating because I had to start living." Yes, she had reason to hate. White people had murdered Emmet Till, Mack Charles Parker, Medgar Evers, Herbert Lee, and the four little girls in the Birmingham church. To make matters worse, white people had acquitted the guilty. She hated because they had lynched and lied and jailed and poisoned and a whole lot of other horrendous crimes. Enough on her feelings of hate....How did her first white friend change her—enough to write a book that both black and white would read.

I'm getting to the meat of the book, "My First White Friend." She, Patricia Raybon, started her reversal of feelings by praying, not in private, but through the day, for help to love an employee that she hated, and or course, to love herself. She read of Mahatma Gandhi's teachings, who wrote that "those who can not find forgiveness in their hearts are trapped in their beliefs of the unforgiveableness of sin." How many times are we to forgive? Jesus tells us seventy times seven or over and over and over again. It's not a one time thing. Raybon says, "It's a God thing. And God as I understand Him will not withhold a second chance or mor." Gandhi says, "The weak can never forgive, for forgiveness is an attribute of the strong." To forgive was to overcome the prejudice Patricia had for the whites and their racism and injustice.

Mississippi in the summer of 1961 seems to me the height of racism and prejudice. It seemed the same to about 700 college students who went to Mississippi to register black voters. They also set up Freedom Schools. On the night of the Freedom workers' arrival, they were confronted with the news of three volunteers who were killed by the Klu Klux Klan. The details are told in the book "Freedom Summer" by Bruce Watson—a must read. Watson confirms that Mississippi was a land out of time, seared by memories of the Civil War. As the volunteers fanned across the state, tensions mounted, beatings intensified, and churches were burned. The volunteers suffered many indignities. Three volunteers were ejected from a cafeteria. Students walked out of class in support.

A Freedom worker received a phone call telling her that everyone had to get out in three days. Freedom House would be bombed, the phone caller said. He said, "There ain't gonna be no Freedom School and no freedom there or any place else."

Muhammad Ali, formerly Cassius Clay, who recounts his life in his book "The Soul of a Butterfly" won an Olympic Gold Medal for boxing at the Olympics. He was very proud to bring him medal home to Louisville. He was a hero for a few days, but then he was refused service in a local café. "We don't serve Negroes," and he was told to leave. He thought his medal would mean something, like freedom and equality, and he thought that if the medal doesn't mean equality then it doesn't mean anything. He walked to the Ohio River, took the medal off, and threw it in the river.

May there be peace on earth,
May hearts of all people be open to themselves and each other.
May all people awaken to the divine light deep within.
May all creation be blessed and be a blessing to all that is.
