

reply id: egbi

Hello,

I'm writing to answer the questions you posed regarding the recent death penalty moratorium.

- 1.) The vast majority of California voters have lived in some semblance of fear as it relates to the death penalty. California Governors for years have preyed upon the ^{ignorant} humility & lack of tolerance for violent crimes by the residents of this state. As such, ~~the~~ voters' mindsets were fueled with hatred and vengeance — while blood dripped haplessly from the lips of our failing court systems. Governor Newsome's decision could never arguably be considered a choice motivated by politics — that's career suicide. However, as a religious and fiscally aware politician, his morals have weighed heavy on his decision. This is a foregone conclusion.

- 2.) No — barbaric yes, wrong... not so much.

3.) what has it been — 40 years since the death penalty was reinstated? And thus, a mere 13 people have been put to death?

10^{x's} More men (and women) have died by suicide and natural causes in this same period of time — this systems is wrought with dysfunction.

Almost certainly — november of 2020 will ~~soon~~ prove the dawn of a new era of ~~with~~ punishment in this state.

California will vote out the death penalty and Life without parole will become the default for the 740 of us who wait for answers.

⊗ California needs to forget about Revenge & get down to the business of SAVING LIVES rather than trying to put timelines on those who may still have redemptive bones in their bodies. We are not all monsters.

Take a minute and acquaint yourself with my proposal and an honest approach at rehabilitation, restitution, & redemption.

See attached

(on FB wadz)

webmaster: Please retype & post the inmateorgans bio, links, & Federal Bureau of Prison's Protocol for organ donation by prisoners for immediate family.