Hello again Erne,

after all I posted BTB for your consideration yesterday, You'll appreciate this insightful article below,

Freedom: Myth, or Reality?

You are born as freedom. It's just that you have been conditioned to forget it.
Osho

We have within us not only the capacity to find ourselves, but also to free ourselves from the myth that we are not free. Freedom is our birthright from our Creator Source.

Our part is to turn our conditioned concepts about our innate state of freedom upside down. Societal conditioning has propagated the belief that we cannot experience our inherent freedom until we have been redeemed from our flawed or sinful state by an outside source be it a savior, a guru taking on our karma—in other words, by our individual acceptance of dogmatic theories about how spiritual liberation is achieved. So the first freedom is freeing ourselves from the false belief that freedom comes from beyond our individual capacity to discover its existence within ourselves.

The second freedom is realizing that the purpose of our spiritual practice is far more than a psychological self-improvement project. This goes beyond mentally affirming our freedom to beginning to live from it, which causes us to develop, unfold, and evolve from the inside out powered by our application of inner spiritual exploration.

The third freedom comes through a humble, grateful acceptance of our spiritual birthright of freedom right where we are, exactly as who we are. Freedom is not some future destination. It is here, now, whispering within that your essence is not the body, not the mind, that what you are is pure, awakened awareness.

As we create the inner conditions for our freedom to be revealed to us, there will be an ongoing, recognizable maturity in our evolutionary process. This recognition is an uncovering of the ultimate Reality of life: You are now, always have been and always shall be free.

Throughout
this day,
under all circumstances, I remind myself
of my innate freedom.

Simplicity IS the seal of Truth.

Be blessed.
