I appreciate your transcriptions and comments, GN22. It's amazing to me how many people miss (or don't seem to care about) the fact that "I can't breathe!" isn't always meant to be a literal statement, though it's almost always meant as a sign of genuine distress. And no question in the world about it, what happened to Mr. Floyd was horrible. The ultimate consequences were unique - hence all the attention - but the basic situation of cops disregarding and mocking their victims is very, very common. Certainly something I've seen and experienced far too many times for any one person.

Thanks also for the nice compliment... what I say has been described many ways, for sure (lol!), but I think "fascinating" is a new one. It feels good! ^

Take care, and thank you for doing what you do for prisoners.
