Poetry

At night
after the dark takes over
I escape
from my window
to count the stars
hiding from the moon
and its reflection
of the sun
I fear the dawn
on summer morning
losing all the secrets
stashed between us
listening to the neighbors dog barking at the grass memories flowering
like running water
off the mountains
Leaving in the field
our names are mysteries we still believe in

9/28/20
Steve Burkett