Kardashian's legal ambitions

Kim Kardashian is very serious about becoming a lawyer, said Jonathan Van Meter in Vogue. The reality-show superstar became a criminal justice reform advocate after connecting with Alice Marie Johnson, a 63-year-old Alabama woman who'd been in prison for a nonviolent drug offense since 1996. Working with activists, Kardashian played a key role in lobbying President Trump to commute Johnson's sentence last summer on the way to signing a bipartisan sentencing reform bill. Kardashian didn't want her efforts to end there. "I just felt like the system could be so different, and I wanted to fix it," she says. "If I knew more, I could do more." Kardashian did not graduate college, but California is one of four states that allow applicants to take the bar after a four-year apprenticeship with a lawyer or judge. She's now working her way through a first-year law student's curriculum. If she passes the "baby bar exam" administered by the state, she'll be approved for three more years of study. "To me, torts is the most confusing, contracts the most boring, and crim law I can do in my sleep," she says. "Took my first test, I got a 100. Super easy for me. The concepts I grasp in two seconds."

Why Cuomo chose journalism

CNN's Chris Cuomo isn't going into the family business, said Jeremy Barr in The Hollywood Reporter. Cuomo is the son of former New York Gov. Mario Cuomo and the brother of the current governor. His career choice was apostasy. "My father was heartbroken when I went into journalism," he says. "He saw the media as a misused political apparatus that was in the business of gotchas and penny-ante interests, without concern for real policy or real implications—especially TV [news]." But Tim Russert, his father's speechwriter, would go on to become a legendary host of Meet the Press, and he encouraged Chris' ambitions. "He raised me," says Cuomo. His combative style has made him a prime-time host on CNN, with 1.3 million people tuning in for his sparring matches with President Trump's defenders. "[Rachel] Maddow's a professor, [Sean] Hannity's a preacher. I was built for the battle," Cuomo says. Still, it's not where Cuomo wants to be, with CNN trailing the more blatantly partisan shows on both Fox and MSNBC. "Any metric you want—relevance, ratings—they're kicking my a--," he says. Cuomo hates the persistent speculation that he'll eventually leave the media to run for office. "What's the story? 'Son of Cuomo, brother of Cuomo. Is he going to get into politics?'" he says. "It's the same story every time."

Leibovitz's photographic insight

Annie Leibovitz has become nearly as famous as the celebrities she photographs, said Jordan Riefe in The Guardian (U.K.). Leibovitz, 69, trained her eye as a photojournalist at Rolling Stone in the 1970s, where she captured some of the decade's defining moments, such as President Richard Nixon leaving the White House for the last time in a helicopter. By the early 1980s she moved into the studio, creating the stylistic portraits that have become her trademark, such as her iconic Vanity Fair cover of a pregnant Demi Moore wearing nothing but a diamond ring. Her image of a naked John Lennon curling up to a fully clothed Yoko Ono was the last picture ever taken of the former Beatle. "I kind of know what people kind of want to look like," Leibovitz says. "I really like to please. This is their life and I like to let them get to wherever the next step is they want to get to." That's easier with some celebrities than others. "People like Johnny Depp or Nicole Kidman—I went kicking and screaming to this idea that there actually were people who the camera did love," she says. "I refused to believe that at first. I had to come to terms with the fact that there are photogenic people."

Gossip

■ Actor Ryan O'Neal once fought to retain Andy Warhol's iconic portrait of O'Neal's late partner Farrah Fawcett, claiming its sentimental value to him was priceless. Now O'Neal is shopping the painting for $20 million, the New York Post reported this week. Back in 2013, a jury ruled that O'Neal could retain the painting even though Fawcett, who died in 2009, left her art collection to the University of Texas, her alma mater. "I talk to her," O'Neal told jurors of the painting. "We lost her.

It would seem a crime to lose it," O'Neal, 77, has priced the painting at $20 million but would "let it go for less," a source said.

■ Amber Heard responded this week to ex-husband Johnny Depp's $50 million defamation suit with new allegations of physical abuse and drug-fueled violence during their brief marriage. Depp filed the lawsuit after Heard wrote in a Washington Post op-ed that she had been a victim of domestic abuse, without naming Depp. In a new court filing, the actress says Depp repeatedly hit and kicked her, head-butted her, pulled out chunks of her hair, and tried to strangle her. Heard said Depp went on sleepless binges during which he took on a "delusional and violent" persona she nicknamed "The Monster." Heard also said Depp "urinated all over" their vacation home and wrote on the walls in his blood. Depp denied the allegations. He's set to star in Fantastic Beasts 3, but Warner Bros. is reportedly "freaking out."

■ Woody Allen breached his movie contract with Amazon by publicly making "insensitive" comments about the #MeToo movement, a lawyer for Amazon argued last week. Allen, 83, sued Amazon for $68 million after the company voided the deal despite having released just one of four promised films. The company backed out after Allen's daughter Dylan Farrow publicly detailed how Allen allegedly sexually abused her as a child. Allen responded by accusing Farrow of "cynically using" #MeToo for attention, calling the movement a "witch hunt." Allen's lawyers demanded to know who at Amazon had nixed the deal, threatening to depose CEO Jeff Bezos.

Kim's Calling

Kim Kardashian West takes Us inside her new documentary

She's best known as a reality star, business mogul and fashionista, but Kim Kardashian West's true passion is less glamorous.
In Oxygen's new documentary Kim Kardashian West: The Justice Project (April 5, 7 P.M.), she goes inside prisons to meet people incarcerated for life and find out what landed them there. "It's definitely changed me," she tells Us exclusively. "I used to maybe be a bit more judgmental. It just really opened my heart and made me a completely more empathetic person."

LEGAL EAGLE Kardashian West, who just finished her first year of law studies with the help of Jessica Jackson (above), cofounder of criminal-justice-reform organization #Cut50, explores four different cases in the program, with the goal of determining whether a life sentence was just.
It's a continuation of the work she's been doing: In 2018, Kar-dashian West helped get the life sentence of Alice Marie Johnson, a 64-year-old woman who was spending life behind bars on a non-violent drug charge, commuted.

"My family's met Alice. And two of my kids met mama Lou, who's in the documentary," she says about North, 6, Saint, 4, Chicago, 2, and Psalm, 8 months. "I'm very open and honest with them about what I'm doing. I think they'll appreciate it, especially when they get older." When Kardashian West, who receives letters from inmates, leaves to go to a prison, "North will say,
'Can I go with you?'" the reality star says, "or, 'Tell him I said hi!'" TALKIN' ABOUT A REVOLUTION Moving forward, the KKW Beauty creator wants to increase her focus on law and prison reform. "I hope we can showcase more people, because there are so many different types of injustice and different types of crimes," she says, using true-crime TV as an example: "It's always from the victim's point of view, never from the [perpetrator's] that had been through a trauma."
Our whole system has to change."
