Greetings,

Please find enclosed a printout of recent comments visitors have left on your blog. NEW: You can now reply directly to these comments, and the commenters will get notified that you have replied. Each set of comments has a unique "reply ID" which is included in the printout. To respond directly, print the reply ID of the comments you are responding to clearly at the top of your letter. Please remember that your responses are still public – anyone on the Internet can read them. We also can't guarantee that the comment writers will read or see your response; but we will do what we can to let them know that you have responded.

Please keep in mind that we don't filter or censor these comments; nor do we endorse them – we just forward them on to you. If there are comments that you disagree with, please remember that there are all kinds of people on the Internet, and while most are well intentioned, some may be less so. The best response to negative comments is usually no response.

Please remember that all information published using our service will be completely public and listed under your full name; we ask you not to send us anything illegal, incriminatory, or which might negatively affect your chances for parole.

Humanities Through The Arts was the most interesting and challenging for me of the three classes I took in the Spring semester. My heartfelt THANK You to the tax-payers providing me this opportunity to understand the impact of Art throughout history. This class was truly an enlightening experience.

Thanks for writing! I finished the transcription for your post.

Hello there, vh1234. Thanks for transcribing my July 3 (?) post, praising my Humanities Through The Arts class.

Now I'm wondering if my Artistic Criticism on Literature essay was ever posted/transcribed. And how about my Extra Credit paper on The Quest Narrative? Both are my work product of that class.

Let me explain why I'm "wondering". You see, after I mail my writing to the blog master – who scans it onto this site – I never see it again. I have no access to cyber space here in my prison cell. Posting blogs has actually always been an act of faith, since I so rarely have the pleasure of reading any public comments. I do trust they're out there though, if and when ever anyone chooses to read my thoughts.

Right now there's one in particular I hope to see public comments on – granting the permission requested on page 3/6 of my August 10 blog "Re: Aug 9 ULC- rehabilitate SOCIAL CONSCIOUSNESS".
