Greetings Michelle. Glad to hear from you. I hope you are doing very well. My apologies for taking so long to respond to your comment. I was moving from prison to prison and was not receiving my mail so I was unaware of your comment. If you still want to write me you are welcome to do so, my address is at the above address.

In regards to my post, thank you for your well put comment. I agree with everything you said. Yes America has made alot of progress, but class biases continue to thrive. Barack Obama was certainly used as a prop to promote a false narrative. Barack Obama is a black man, but him being the son of a white mother can not be overlooked. I believe him being the son of a white woman, made many whites comfortable with voting for him. So until I see a black man or woman, who's parents are black and came from poverty, or lower class become president, I will not believe a black person from an underprivileged community can become president of the USA! I hope I am wrong on this one! Take Care hope to hear from you soon.
