How can sex offenders get better when the California prison system refuses to provide them the means like sex therapy classes.

Their excuses are many but my favorite one is when they say its not safe for sex offenders.

Couldn't they provide a safe yard for them to live on away from all those that would harm them.

One would think that they would do every thing possible so that they can limit potential victims in the future.

I think in reality they do not care about things of that nature.

Has any one out there ever heard the CDCR doing the right thing or something that makes sense.
