Inmates are looking up peoples charges to see if they are sex offenders. They can actually use their tablets to see what people are in prison for. Or they have their people look up the sex offenders and then they take pictures of the material and send it to the inmates tablet. This puts the inmate in harms way. The CDCR is aware of what is going on and allow the inmates to receive this personal information. You'd think that they would try and prevent such sensitive information into the institution. Go figure. Has any sex offenders in the free world suffered from other inmates that got ahold of information when they were incarcerated in prison. If so I would like to hear your story. Holler back.
