

HANDS

The word of the day last week was definitely "Hands!" with pronounced emphasis. It was several black, higher ranking guards, of an emergency response group, with two white contraband officers standing in the back waiting for the clear.

It was very ... different.

Apparently a jealous person sent them. I think someone knew I had just finished reading a book on quantum physics and was taking a nap. A white intellectual is the biggest threat apparently. Meanwhile in other cells in other dorms guys are being raped or extorted by their roommate, they are smoking dope, sharpening homemade knives, or any other of a multitude of gang activities.

I am sure they realized after, that their "reliable source" and snitch-line was inaccurate and they wasted all that time. All I do now is study, read, type, and work on a new book I am doing called: "JOHN TITOR and The Nature of the Universe" -- that's about my ideas of a unified spherical theory that ties everything together in an information based exchange within a holographic reality. And of course, when I say hologram it's not what you think, it's just saying that quanta as information works together to create what our minds perceive as an interactive reality. I don't think of it as a 2D realm of information creating a 3D -- it's more like a 7D creating a 4D that we think of as 3D. But, all that's for the book.

The drawing, is a doodle I did in about a minute (or two) to express what I awoke to. This is prison, so it's all part of the world here. In the end, the guards are all just doing their jobs. Some just do it better than others by treating prisoners as fellow humans. The guards now have body cams, due to the thousands of lawsuits and incidents involving them beating prisoners. This was my first experience with the new body cams, and I can already see that their behavior is 10X different. The "HANDS!" shakedown was probably the most professional one I have ever went through, and the most thorough. If there had been any contraband in my cell, they definitely would have found it -- they didn't miss an inch. But, at the same they weren't rude about it, and didn't destroy stuff.

Question is, are the body cams to thank for that?