LOOKING FOR YOUR THOUGHTS FOR MY UPCOMING BOOK

I am currently in the process of doing research for a book I am working on which I plan to title: "Justice or Vengeance: Has America's Federal Legal System lost its way?"

I want to present a well rounded picture of how people feel about The United State's Federal Legal System. In order for me to do this, I need experiences and opinions from very diverse populations. I have easy access to plenty of individuals who have first hand knowledge of being caught up in the Federal System, but what about people who have never been arrested? What about families who have had loved ones arrested and/or incarcerated by the "Feds"? What about individuals who do not live in the United States and only view our legal system from a distance? What about victims of crime?

I would really love to hear from anyone who would like to share their experiences, thoughts and/or opinions. The more feedback I get, the more accurate my book can reflect how people feel about the current state of American Justice. Some of the questions I would like you to consider are:

Do you think the Federal Legal System in America is fair?
Do you think America's Department of Justice is mostly about justice or something else? If you feel it is about something else, in your opinion what is it about?
Do you think individuals convicted of a federal crime in America receive too much or too little time?
Do you think individuals convicted of a federal crime can be rehabilitated? If so, how many years do you think would be sufficient for rehabilitation?
What are your opinions, fears, concerns, or hopes about bringing back parole for federal inmates?
In your opinion, what is the purpose of prison?
In your opinion, is the Federal Bureau of Prisons meeting its purpose?
What would you like to see changed in the United States Department of Justice and/or The Federal Bureau of Prisons when it comes to prosecuting federal crimes and incarcerating federal prisoners?

These questions represent only a few of the many areas I would like to hear your opinions on in regards to how The United States handles federal crimes. Please share with me anything you would like to share concerning this topic.

I look forward to hearing from anyone who takes the time to leave me their thoughts. There is no right or wrong opinion so feel free to share anything that is on your mind.
